Description

Model kit of the 1970 Plymouth Road Runner with distinctive design in yellow painting. Scale 1:25, 77 parts, Length 21.6 cm, Age 12+

As the muscle car craze took off in the late 1960s, there appeared to be a ready market that could be met by offering more inexpensive models. Plymouth responded with the 1969 Road Runner, which had all of the muscle, but none of the fancy extras found on relatively expensive performance cars. The lack of frills helped keep the Road Runner's price low, which was exactly what many buyers were looking for.

The restyled 1970 Road Runner was part of Plymouth's new "Rapid Transit System" family of high-performance cars. Whimsical new features included optional "dust trail" side stripes and a wild collection of attention-grabbing "High Impact" paint colors. The optional 440-H engine ran a trio of 2-barrel carbs and punched out 350 horsepower and a whopping 430 lb-ft of torque. So equipped, a Road Runner could cut the quarter mile in the mid-13-second range at over 102 mph. - Detailed 440-H V-8 engine - Hood scoop that can be positioned open or closed - Detailed interior with separate side panels and a front bench seat - Choice of Magnum 500 steel wheels with "Doo Dash" hubcaps
