About the Ducati 916

Ducati, the renowned Italian motorcycle manufacturer, is highly regarded by motorcycle enthusiasts the world over. Their current top-of-the-line "916" bike was unveiled to the public during the 1993 Milan Motor Show. In recent years, Ducati has been a dominant force at the World Superbike Championships. Their 916 was developed using the latest racing technology and expertise, and became a very effective base machine for these Championships.

Its 114 horsepower, 916cc, liquid-cooled L-twin cylinder engine uses a computer-controlled fuel injection system and Ducati's traditional Desmodromic valve operation system. This valve system uses cam mechanics for both opening and closing the valves, while a conventional system closes the valves with springs only. The powerful engine is mounted in a light weight and extremely rigid, chrome-molybdenum steel tubular frame.

The rear swing arm suspension uses a mono-arm for quick tire changing during competition. Showa's shock absorbers and Brembo brake calipers are used at both ends. The 916 has a 2-stage adjustable caster offset system. Its aerodynamic cowling design is very distinctive, differing from other race-replica bikes. The front cowling engine air intake openings and mounts the dual headlamps. The fuel tank is ergonomically sculptured to fit the rider's crouching posture during hard riding. The 916 is a true street legal racing machine on the leading edge of performance and styling.
